Possible top scorers

European Championship Qualifying Top Scorers

Cristiano Ronaldo or Antoine Griezmann are our bet for top scorer at the tournament at 8/1 and 9/1 with Portugal and France. France are set to coast through Group A with Romania, Albania and Switzerland unlikely to trouble them. In Group F, Portugal look to be in a similar position with Iceland, Austria and Hungary not the toughest of opponents.

Cristiano Ronaldo has managed 49 goals in La Liga and Champion's League action this year and will hope to add to his 56 international goals tally. Antoine Griezmann helped Atlético Madrid to the Champions League final scoring seven goals on top of his 21 in La Liga added to three in the Copa del Rey. This will be his breakthrough tournament at international level having managed just seven goals at international level.

Having been top scorer in qualifying with 13 goals, Poland's Robert Lewandowski is the player most people will put their money behind. But with games against Germany, Ukraine and Northern Ireland it will be tough for him, but he has the talent at 16/1. There is however the 2012 Euros in the back of his mind, where Lewandowski managed just one goal as Poland were eliminated at the group stages.

Thomas Muller scored nine goals in qualifying and scored 32 goals in all competitions this season. That is reason enough to back him at 7-1.

Harry Kane at 14/1, Daniel Sturridge 33/1, Wayne Rooney 40/1 and Jamie Vardy at 50/1 don't look like the safest bets with England not having the greatest of tournaments in the past, there is no reason why they would stop it in France.

If you are feeling rather patriotic Shane Long at 150/1 is a bit of an outside bet, but with this the year of the underdog, who is to say Long won't be top scorer for the Republic of Ireland fixtures at Euro 2016 .
